The strategy in brief

01 Product and orientation — Taste, convenience and affordability, designed around customer needs. 3

02 Competition — Up against energy bars and everyday snacks. We win on local ingredients, packaging and price. 5

03 Segmentation — Demographic, geographic, psychographic and behavioral lenses. 6

04 Target market — University students first; gym members and busy professionals second. 7

05 Marketing mix — Penetration pricing, campus and gym distribution, free samples and influencers. 8

06 Customer relationships — Satisfaction, repeat purchases, loyalty (buy 9, get 1 free) and feedback. 9

The plan on one page — Five moves to launch FitBite. 10

01

SECTION 01

Product and marketing orientation

FitBite is a healthy snack made from familiar and nutritious local ingredients. It comes in a small, convenient pack that is easy to carry, and it is designed specifically for the needs of busy students and employees.

What's inside

Dates

Peanuts

Oats

Sesame seeds

Core value

The value FitBite offers lies in combining three things customers want at once.

Great taste

Familiar ingredients that are popular among Sudanese consumers.

Convenience

A small pack that is easy to carry and eat anywhere.

Affordability

Only 1,000 Sudanese pounds per pack.

Pack and brand

The pack carries product information, the expiry date and allergen warnings.

The brand reflects an active, convenient lifestyle.

“Great Taste, Convenient Energy, Ready for Your Day!”

MARKETING MESSAGE

The exchange

Customers pay money in return for energy, nutrition and taste. The company receives revenue, as well as valuable customer feedback that helps it keep improving.

Why we chose the Marketing Concept

The Marketing Concept focuses on understanding and satisfying customers' needs and wants. It fits FitBite because the product was developed after identifying a real need, represented by a customer persona named Ahmed: a student who needs an affordable and nutritious snack. The product was then designed to satisfy that need.

ORIENTATION	FOCUS	WHAT IT MEANS FOR FITBITE
OUR CHOICE Marketing Concept	Understanding and satisfying customer needs and wants	The product is designed around a real need (Ahmed), which supports long-term loyalty
Production Concept	Efficiency and distribution	Risk May overlook customer preferences
Product Concept	Quality and performance	Risk Can lead to excessively high prices
Selling Concept	Aggressive promotion and sales efforts	Risk Relies on pushing sales rather than building long-term loyalty

SECTION 02

Competitive analysis

Competition in the snack market falls into two categories: products that do the same job as FitBite, and anything else people buy to satisfy their hunger.

Direct competitors

4 brands

Products with similar benefits that serve the same purpose, such as energy bars and snack products.

- Tiger Bar
- Break Bar
- Abu Auf
- Datto

Indirect competitors

5 alternatives

Alternative products customers may buy instead to satisfy their hunger.

- Royal biscuits
- Captain Majid chips
- Cadbury chocolate
- Bakery products
- Fresh fruits

Competitive advantage

Familiar local ingredients

Ingredients that are familiar and popular among Sudanese consumers.

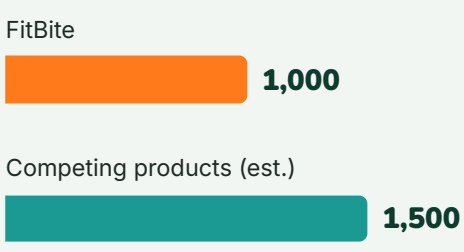

Convenient packaging

A small, practical pack that is easy to carry and eat anywhere.

Affordable price

1,000 SDG, compared with about 1,500 SDG for many competing products.

Price per pack (SDG)

FitBite is about one-third cheaper. The competitor price is an approximate estimate.

OUR POSITION

Together, these advantages position FitBite as an affordable, convenient and appealing snack option.

03

SECTION 03

Market segmentation

The market is divided into four segments based on demographic, geographic, psychographic and behavioral characteristics.

Demographic

FitBite targets consumers aged 16 to 35, particularly students and employees with low to middle incomes.

- Ages 16–35
- Students
- Employees
- Low to middle income

Geographic

The first target areas are Khartoum, Omdurman and Bahri, particularly near universities, gyms and other places target customers visit often.

- Khartoum
- Omdurman
- Bahri
- Near universities and gyms

Psychographic

People who prefer convenient, familiar and affordable snacks that fit their active lifestyles.

- Convenient
- Familiar
- Affordable
- Active lifestyle

Behavioral

Consumers who buy snacks regularly, need a quick refreshment during breaks, and are attracted to discounts, special offers and multipack deals.

- Regular buyers
- Quick breaks
- Discounts and offers
- Multipacks

THE FOUR LENSES COMBINED

A 16-to-35-year-old student or employee in Khartoum, Omdurman or Bahri who wants a convenient, familiar, affordable snack, buys snacks regularly and responds to good offers.

SECTION 04

04 Target market

FitBite's target market is divided into two groups: one we lead with, and one we grow into.

PRIMARY TARGET

University students aged 18 to 30

Need affordable, tasty and convenient snacks during their studies and daily activities.

SECONDARY TARGET

Gym members and busy professionals

Need a quick snack during their daily routines.

Ahmed

22 · University student

Limited budget

CUSTOMER PERSONA

Ahmed is a 22-year-old university student with a limited budget. He needs an affordable, tasty and nutritious snack that he can easily carry in his backpack and eat between lectures.

- Affordable
- Tasty
- Nutritious
- Easy to carry

Why this market is attractive

Repeat sales

Students buy snacks regularly, which makes them a source of repeat sales.

Affordable reach

They can be reached through low-cost channels: TikTok, Instagram and word of mouth among students.

To verify before presenting as fact. The assumption that this market represents more than 40% of the total market needs to be confirmed through market research before it is presented as a confirmed statistic.

05

SECTION 05

THE MESSAGE THAT TIES THE MIX TOGETHER

06

SECTION 06

Customer relationship management

Four practices work as a cycle: keep customers satisfied, bring them back, earn their loyalty, and listen to what they say.

STEP 1

Customer satisfaction

We provide good quality and affordable prices to keep our customers happy.

STEP 2

Repeat purchases

We encourage customers to buy FitBite regularly through special offers.

STEP 4

Customer feedback

We listen to customers' opinions to improve the product and introduce new flavors.

STEP 3

Customer loyalty

We build trust with customers through a loyalty program.

LOYALTY PROGRAM

Buy 9, get 1 free

Buy 9 packages and the tenth is free. It builds trust and keeps customers coming back.

THE PLAN ON ONE PAGE

Five moves to launch FitBite

Each move comes straight from the strategy. Together they take a customer from first taste to loyal buyer.

01

Launch where students are

Sell through university cafeterias, gyms and fitness centers, grocery stores and supermarkets in Khartoum, Omdurman and Bahri, plus online on Facebook, Instagram and TikTok.

SEGMENTATION · PLACE

02

Enter at 1,000 SDG

Use market penetration pricing, below the estimated 1,500 SDG competitor price, with student and multipack discounts.

PRICE

03

Drive trial

Hand out free samples at universities and gyms, work with influencers, advertise on social media and use point-of-sale posters.

PROMOTION

04

Reward loyalty

Run the loyalty program (buy 9 packages, get 1 free) and special offers that turn first purchases into a habit.

CUSTOMER RELATIONSHIPS

05

Validate and improve

Confirm the size of the target market through market research, and use customer feedback to improve the product and introduce new flavors.
